How to Write an IEP that Actually
Addresses a Student's Unique

Circumstances: Connecting the Dots from Present Levels to Goals to Placement
Part 1, 2, and 3

CONTENT FOCUS:

Connecting the Dots in an IEP is essential to developing an IEP that provides a free appropriate public education and that meets the standards required by Rowley and Endrew F. How do you develop an IEP that connects the dots from present levels to goals to placement? Across 3 sessions, this series of workshops will examine, in detail, how to develop these components of an IEP in a legally-defensible manner. Real life examples and cases will be examined in the course of this series, which will provide practical applications to everyday IEP drafting.
